Learn how letter writing keeps Lyme issues in the Public Eye

Tonight's panel presentation is offered by our medical advisor, public relations coordinator and legislative chair. They will address the vital role letter writing plays with state and congressional legislators and how letters to the editor gives the general public a voice.

- Dr. Betty Maloney, a family physician from Wyoming, will discuss the importance of keeping a topic alive in front of the general public.
- Monique Dubos will review how to craft letters to your state and national legislators. Additionally, she will provide template to use when drafting editorial letters.
- Mark Thompson will wrap up the evening with an update of federal HB 1179 and SB1352. These 2 bills can change the face of Lyme disease in the US with research dollars and several other key components.
